

Hell Gate Bridge, left. German saboteurs were told it was an important transportation point in NY: it carried the main traffic from the north. See ch. 5. Targets in America were more than looked over by the Axis as Americans entered defense plants.

After the invasion of North Africa, the U.S. Army realized that the intensity of combat operations was more than they bargained for, and so during the winter of 1942-43, word began to get out that Japanese-Americans could volunteer for combat, if enough volunteers volunteered. They did. Initially, over 10,000 men were loyal, and patriotic (part of the volunteers on your left) and were put to the test after 1942; the brave actions are in my 7th vol.

U.S. Marine Corps

U.S. 32nd Inf Div
Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea

U.S. Army Forces South Atlantic

U.S. 41st Inf Div
Australia

